
Why this project?

The economic crisis that hit Europe in the last five years has inevitably led to changes in people's lives.

This crisis impacted concretely on household wallets changing daily choices and lifestyles of millions of Europeans.

The cost of living has grown significantly thus creating a further imbalance between revenues and expenditures in household budgets. Learn and share best practices for the daily domestic routine when using available resources but with benefits for your home wallet, collective economy and environmental sustainability.

Who are we?

cocoate.com is an independent management consultancy, based in France, but working internationally. Specialized in three areas, consulting, coaching and teaching, we develop web based strategies for process and project management, provide customized trainings in the area of management and leadership skills. In our European educational projects we place particular emphasis on learning methods and learning strategies, the creative implementation of web applications, and local community development.

To balance the family budget is necessary to re-think our consumerism, limit waste and reorganize resources, according to a new philosophy that combines micro and macro economic aspects with environmental sustainability.

The approach is therefore to look back to rediscover the value of knowledge of the reuse and reduce that was, not long time ago, the basis of the local economy. We involve different generations in an informal way, to share their experiences, knowledge and to develop new activities together.

During national and international workshops we will learn and inspire each other to rethink our daily routines. You are invited to participate!
